The Program

Aggression is often the underlying issue in clinical work. Knowing how individuals learn to express and manage aggression in the course of development is basic to facilitating adaptation and emotional growth in therapy. Henri Parens' 37-year longitudinal study of the interaction of children and parents over childhood aggression shows how parental evaluation and management of a child's aggression influences the way that individual expresses aggression later in life. Parens will present the theoretical concepts and research findings that form the basis of Parenting for Emotional Growth, an educational series to help parents develop appropriate skills to manage their children's aggression. Participants will have an opportunity to complete an actual module of the Workshops on Aggression. They will evaluate the educational effect of the module by comparing their pre and post workshop attitudes. Parens will also present the findings of the long-term followup study. Discussants will consider the applications of these concepts and research findings to clinical practice for both adult and child patients, and for community-wide preventive mental health interventions.

This is our first child-focused program. Participants will explore the value of a well informed theory of early development in forming researchable questions, the answers to which make useful contributions to the psychotherapy not only of children but also of adults.

The Consortium

The Consortium for Psychoanalytic Research, Inc. is a District of Columbia not-for-profit corporation that represents fifteen Baltimore-Washington area organizations interested in building a bridge between clinicians and clinically relevant research. In recent years, there has been burgeoning research on psychoanalytic psychotherapy that enhances understanding of the process and outcomes that characterize effective treatment. We have also seen the fruition of longitudinal studies of human emotional development that are informed by psychoanalytic concepts. The CPRinc sponsors yearly conferences to bring researchers and clinicians together to share data and ideas, with the aim of bridging the gap between the clinical and research communities.
